EDITOR'S NOTES	1
Randee Lipson Lawrence
1. Knowledge Construction as Contested Terrain: Adult Learning Through Artistic Expression	3
Randee Lipson Lawrence
The chapter challenges rational ways of knowing and textual forms of teaching and learning that predominate in adult education. A case is presented for incorporating the arts into educational programs.
2. Music Works: Music for Adult English Language Learners	13
Kristin Lems
The value of music for helping adult second language learners master listening comprehension, oral pronunciation, and reading and writing skills is described. Attention to the learners' cultural context is emphasized.
3. Lessons from the Anhinga Trail: Poetry and Teaching	23
Anne McCrary Sullivan
A poet educator describes uses of poetry in a graduate research course, and as a way of accessing knowledge in a national park.
4. Autophotography in Adult Education: Building Creative Communities for Social Justice and Democratic Education	33
Keith B. Armstrong
Autophotography, an artistic strategy combining autobiography with photography, is discussed in the context of a participatory residential learning community.
5. Mental Illness Through Popular Theater: Performing (In)Sanely	45
Steven E. Noble
The author describes how popular theater helped people with mental disorders move from marginalization to social inclusion, and at the same time educated the community about the myths and realities of mental illness.
6. Music for Community Education and Emancipatory Learning	55
Kevin Olson
This chapter is an historical review of music in adult education for social change, community development, and group identity and solidarity in a variety of contexts. Implications for music in educational programs are discussed.

7. Scrap Mettle SOUL: Learning to Create Social Change at the Intersection of Differences Through Community Performance Theater	65
Bette Halperin Donoho
The author describes her experiences as a participant observer in an urban community performance group, dramatizing the stories of community residents to bring about awareness and social change.
8. Weaving the Tapestry: Tying Themes and Threads Together	75
Randee Lipson Lawrence
This chapter integrates and synthesizes the themes presented in the various chapters in this volume. Although the authors work with a number of art forms in varied contexts, there are many commonalities.
