Editors' Notes 1

Patrick Rooney, Lois Sherman

1. Black philanthropy's past, present, and future 5
Emmett D. Carson
The CEO of the Minneapolis Foundation offers two definitions of black philanthropy and a discussion of its nature as a concept that adapts based on its environment.
2. Professionalism in black philanthropy: We have a chance to get it right 13
Charles R. Stephens
Adherence to the three C's—a common curriculum, a common code of ethics, and a comprehensively accepted certification—forms the basis of fully professional practice in fundraising.
3. The African American megachurch: Giving and receiving 21
Cheryl Hall-Russell
This study of several dozen African American megachurches focused on social outreach programs, economic development investment, growth trends, spiritual and theological philosophies, and challenges facing the church.
4. Philanthropy among African American donors in the New York metropolitan region: A generational analysis 31
Felinda Mottino, Eugene D. Miller
African American donors in the New York metropolitan area tend to be more affluent and better educated than the population in general. They also hold attitudes about philanthropy that are both similar to and sharply different from traditional approaches.
5. Wealth transfer estimates for African American households 47
John J. Havens, Paul G. Schervish
The amount of wealth that will be transferred between generations of African Americans in the next half-century is limited by the reality of comparatively lower assets and a low rate of growth in wealth.

6. Religious and secular giving, by race and ethnicity 57
Richard Steinberg, Mark Wilhelm
Data on charitable practices, formerly lacking and now becoming available through the Center on Philanthropy Panel Study, are tapped for fresh insights on differences in the philanthropy of racial and ethnic groups.
7. Government shekels and government shackles revisited:
Questions for church and state 67
Sheila Suess Kennedy
Faith-based organizations entering into government contracts for delivery of social services should be aware of the potential problems that accompany the benefits and of the three C's that require careful consideration: capacity, commitment, and constitutionality.
8. Promoting diversity in contemporary black philanthropy:
Toward a new conceptual model 77
Jacqueline Copeland-Carson
In a call for a more inclusive model of black philanthropy in the United States, Copeland-Carson argues that the focus is too limited when black philanthropy is viewed only as the giving traditions of native-born African Americans.
9. Immigrant assimilation and charitable giving 89
Una Okonkwo Osili, Dan Du
Descriptions of how ethnicity and cultural traditions affect giving patterns are extended to the practices of immigrants, whose giving is based on experiences in their country of origin.
10. Race philanthropy: Personalities, institutions, networks, and communities 105
John H. Stanfield
This personal recounting of becoming a researcher of race philanthropy includes an appeal for research to outline policy strategies and civic participation practices for a multiracial society that is also a multiracial democracy.
11. Hopscotching in the neighborhood 113
Alice Green Burnette
To win at hopscotch, a player cannot step on a line and skip a square, because all squares must be navigated sequentially. It takes a lot of skill and dexterity in order to win—at hopscotch and at fundraising in the black community.
