1. Children's Moral Emotions and Moral Cognition: Towards an Integrative Perspective	1
Tina Malti, Brigitte Latzko
This chapter gives an introduction into the central theme of the volume. The authors suggest an integrative developmental perspective on children's moral emotions and moral cognition to provide a conceptual framework for understanding children's emerging morality and designing developmentally sensitive moral intervention strategies.
2. Moral Emotions and Moral Judgments in Children's Narratives: Comparing Real-Life and Hypothetical Transgressions	11
Eveline Gutzwiller-Helfenfinger, Luciano Gasser, Tina Malti
In this chapter naturally occurring moral judgments and emotions in real-life transgressions are compared with those in hypothetical situations.
3. Empathy and Social-Emotional Learning: Pitfalls and Touchstones for School-Based Programs	33
Bruce Maxwell, Sarah DesRoches
The authors discuss the use of empathy in formal social-emotional learning programs. The chapter highlights three common pitfalls of empathy use in typical programs of this type.
4. The Problem of Moral Motivation and the Happy Victimizer Phenomenon: Killing Two Birds with One Stone	55
Gerhard Minnameier
The chapter critically examines the theoretical background of empirical research on children's moral emotion expectancies within the happy victimizer paradigm. The author questions whether this approach is necessary to explain the well-known gap between moral cognition and moral action.
5. The Emotional Foundations of High Moral Intelligence	77
Darcia Narvaez
Using triune ethics theory, this chapter provides an example of how the development of moral emotions and neuroscience can be integrated.
