

CONTENTS

1. Research and Theory on Respect and Disrespect: Catching Up with the Public and Practitioners 1
David W. Shwalb, Barbara J. Shwalb
Respect and disrespect as psychological constructs are relevant to cross-cultural and mainstream developmental sciences. Despite a lack of interest in these concepts among researchers and theorists, they are major concerns of the public and practitioners.
2. Exploring the Concept of Respect Among Turkish and Puerto Rican Migrant Mothers 9
Robin L. Harwood, Alev Yalçinkaya, Banu Citlak, Birgit Leyendecker
There are cultural and generational influences on three aspects of respect: proper interpersonal behavior, relations within the family, and esteem within the community.
3. Respect in Southeast Asian American Children and Adolescents: Cultural and Contextual Influences 25
Carl L. Bankston III, Danielle Antoinette Hidalgo
The influence of respect on adjustment, relationships, and achievement differ at home and in school, comparing Southeast Asian Americans whose families were refugees vs. immigrants.
4. Respect in Japanese Childhood, Adolescence, and Society 39
Shuji Sugie, David W. Shwalb, Barbara J. Shwalb
Historical and social change in postwar and postmodern Japan may cause Japan to change from a “society of respect” to a “society of scorn.”
5. Respect, Liking, and Peer Social Competence in China and the United States 53
Robert Cohen, Yeh Hsueh, Zongkui Zhou, Miriam H. Hancock, Randy Floyd
Culture matters in the relation between children’s understanding and expression of respect and their peer social competence.
6. Concept Development of Respect and Disrespect in American Kindergarten and First- and Second-Grade Children 67
Barbara J. Shwalb, David W. Shwalb
Respect and disrespect as independent concepts in American children are rooted in early childhood and change in the transition to middle childhood.

7. Respect in Children Across Cultures 81

Jin Li

This volume is the first to provide a compelling description of the content, functions, and developmental course of respect in childhood and adolescence. More cross-cultural studies are needed to further clarify this concept.

INDEX 91