Contents

Preface

1 The Vocal Tract

1.1 Seeing the vocal tract: tools for speech research

1.2 Parts of the vocal tract

1.2.1 The sub-laryngeal vocal tract

1.2.2 The larynx

1.2.3 The supra-laryngeal vocal tract

Chapter summary

Further reading

Review exercises

Further analysis and discussion

Go online

References

2 Basics of Articulation: Manner and Place in English

2.1 The dance of the articulators

2.2 Phonetic transcription

2.3 The building blocks of speech

2.3.1 Airstream, larynx, and velum

2.3.2 Manner of articulation

2.3.3 Place of articulation for consonants

2.3.4 Vowels

Chapter summary

Further reading

Review exercises

Further analysis and discussion

Go online

3 A Tour of the Consonants

3.1 “Exotic” sounds and the phonetic environment

3.2 Pulmonic consonants

3.3 Glottal consonants

Chapter summary

Further reading

Review exercises

Further analysis and discussion

Go online

References
8.2 Breaking sounds down 160
  8.2.1 RMS amplitude 161
  8.2.2 Autocorrelation pitch analysis 161
  8.2.3 Fourier analysis 165
  8.2.4 Linear predictive coding 167

Chapter summary 169
Further reading 170
Review exercises 170
Further analysis and discussion 171
Further research 171
Go online 172
References 172

9 Hearing and Speech Perception 173

9.1 Anatomy and physiology of the ear 174
9.2 Neuro-anatomy 181
  9.2.1 Studying the brain 181
  9.2.2 Primary auditory pathways 183
9.3 Speech perception 186
  9.3.1 Non-linearity 186
  9.3.2 Variability and invariance 187
  9.3.3 Cue integration 190
  9.3.4 Top-down processing 192
  9.3.5 Units of perception 192

Chapter summary 194
Further reading 195
Review exercises 195
Further analysis and discussion 196
Go online 197
References 197

10 Phonology 1: Abstraction, Contrast, Predictability 198

10.1 The necessity of abstraction 199
10.2 Contrast and predictability: phonemes and allophones 203
  10.2.1 Defining the phoneme 203
  10.2.2 Phonemic analysis 207
10.3 Some complicating factors 211
  10.3.1 Is one allophone always “basic”? 211
  10.3.2 Phonetic similarity and complementary distribution 212
  10.3.3 Free variation 213
  10.3.4 Positional neutralization 214
10.4 Structuralism, Behaviorism, and the decline of phonemic analysis 214

Chapter summary 216
Further reading 216
Review exercises 216
Further analysis and discussion 217
Further research 219
Go online 219
References 219
11 Phonotactics and Alternations

11.1 Phonotactic constraints
- 11.1.1 Actual words and possible words
- 11.1.2 Absolute and statistical generalizations
- 11.1.3 Borrowings

11.2 Analyzing alternations

11.3 Alternations: what to expect
- 11.3.1 Local assimilation
- 11.3.2 Long-distance assimilation
- 11.3.3 Coalescence
- 11.3.4 Dissimilation
- 11.3.5 Lenition and fortition
- 11.3.6 Epenthesis
- 11.3.7 Deletion
- 11.3.8 Lengthening and shortening
- 11.3.9 Metathesis
- 11.3.10 Morphological interactions

Chapter summary

Further reading

Review exercises

Further analysis and discussion

Go online

References

12 What Is A Possible Language? Distinctive Features

12.1 Introduction
- 12.1.1 Phonological universals
- 12.1.2 Why bother with formalism?
- 12.1.3 Some hypotheses

12.2 Distinctive features
- 12.2.1 Background
- 12.2.2 Major class and manner features
- 12.2.3 Laryngeal features
- 12.2.4 Major place distinctions
- 12.2.5 Subsidiary place distinctions
- 12.2.6 Features for vowels

12.3 How have our hypotheses fared?

Chapter summary

Further reading

Review exercises

Further analysis and discussion

Go online

References

13 Rules and Derivations in Generative Grammar

13.1 Generative grammars

13.2 Underlying representations
16 Stress 353

16.1 What is linguistic stress? 354
16.2 Cross-linguistic typology 356
16.3 A feature for stress? 360
16.4 Metrical structure 360
16.5 Stress in English 365
   16.5.1 Overview 365
   16.5.2 Nouns 366
   16.5.3 Verbs and adjectives 367
   16.5.4 Words with affixes, and lexical phonology 368
Chapter summary 370
Further reading 371
Review exercises 371
Further analysis and discussion 372
Further research 374
Go online 374
References 374

17 Tone and Intonation 375

17.1 Tone 376
   17.1.1 Tone contrasts 376
   17.1.2 Tonal representations 380
   17.1.3 Tone alternations: the evidence from Africa and the Americas 383
   17.1.4 Tone alternations: the evidence from Asia 388
17.2 Intonation 392
   17.2.1 What is intonation? 392
   17.2.2 Intonational representations 393
Chapter summary 397
Further reading 397
Review exercises 398
Further analysis and discussion 399
Further research 399
Go online 400
References 400

18 Diachronic Change 401

18.1 Languages change 402
   18.1.1 English in the last millennium 402
   18.1.2 Types of sound change 405
   18.1.3 Causes and effects 407
18.2 Historical reconstruction 408
   18.2.1 Proto-Indo-European 408
   18.2.2 Grimm’s Law, Verner’s Law and the Neo-grammarian hypothesis 411
   18.2.3 Limits to the tree model 414
18.3 History of English 415
   18.3.1 Old English 415
   18.3.2 Middle English 417
   18.3.3 Modern English 419
19 Variation

19.1 Variation by place
- 19.1.1 What is a dialect?
- 19.1.2 Dialects of North American English
- 19.1.3 Dialects of British English
- 19.1.4 Australia, New Zealand, South Africa
- 19.1.5 World Englishes
- 19.1.6 Place and identity

19.2 Other sources of variation
- 19.2.1 Register
- 19.2.2 Socioeconomic distinctions
- 19.2.3 Ethnicity
- 19.2.4 Gender, age, sexuality
- 19.2.5 Variation and identity

19.3 Formalizing variation
- 19.3.1 Traditional sociolinguistic analyses
- 19.3.2 Traditional phonological analyses
- 19.3.3 Stochastic grammars

20 Acquisition and Learning

20.1 Language acquisition and language learning
20.2 Child language acquisition: the data
- 20.2.1 Tools
- 20.2.2 Perception in the first year
- 20.2.3 Child language production

20.3 Theories of L1 acquisition
- 20.3.1 Innateness vs. environmental effects
- 20.3.2 Acquiring language-specific contrasts

20.4 L2 Learning
- 20.4.1 Tools
- 20.4.2 L2 perception
- 20.4.3 L2 production

20.5 Acquisition, learning, and linguistic theory

Chapter summary
Further reading