Contents

Contributor biographies v
Foreword xi

1 Introduction
Gail Boniface and Alison Seymour

Section 1: Theory

2 Reconfiguring professional thinking and conduct: a challenge for occupational therapists in practice
Della Fish and Gail Boniface

3 Defining occupational therapy theory
Gail Boniface

4 From Strands to The Invisibles: from a technical to a moral mode of reflective practice
Della Fish

5 The use of self in occupational therapy
Alison Seymour

Section 2: The Use of Theory in Practice: Some Practitioner Narratives

6 Developing the use of the Model of Human Occupation in a mental health service
Linda Keelan and Lisa John

7 Using Reed and Sanderson’s Model of Adaptation through Occupation: a journey
Karen Lewis and Sharon James
Contents

8 Using the Canadian Model of Occupational Performance to reconfigure an integrated occupational therapy service 91
Siân Waygood, Margot Mason, Heather Hurst, Tamsin Fedden and Caroline Phelps

9 Dealing with the barriers to change whilst implementing the Canadian Model of Occupational Performance 106
Jane Walker and Gillian Thistlewood

10 Developing occupational therapy theory in Poland 120
Ania Pietrzak and Magdalena Loska

11 Using occupational therapy theory in Croatia 128
Andreja Bartolac

12 Personal reflections on understanding and using the Model of Human Occupation in practice 141
Sarah Cook

Section 3: Contemporary Discussions on the Use of Theory in Occupational Therapy Practice

13 Using occupational therapy theory within evidence-based practice 155
Carly Reagon

14 Occupational science and occupational therapy: a contemporary relationship 165
Jill Riley

15 Myths around using theory in occupational therapy practice 180
Alison Seymour, Gail Boniface and Louise Ingham

Index 189