INDEX

absolute error
  of extinction coefficient caused by signal distortions, 106
  of retrieved extinction coefficient, 34–35 acquisition time, 29 additive distortion of lidar signal, 6 additive range-independent component in lidar signal, 2–6
aerosol extinction and backscattering, Raman lidar profiling of, 80–82
aerosol-polluted atmosphere, Fernald’s solution for, 15
aerosol layer boundary, determining, 175 afterpulsing effect, 68
algorithmic uncertainty, 24 Angstrom exponential dependence, 81 in atmospheric investigations, 90–91 aposteriori simulation, 22, 31, 64, 121, 136, 198, 244
apriori
  assumptions, 132–133
  of backscatter-to-extinction ratio, 13, 30 in nonstationary atmosphere, 25
  in extinction-coefficient profiles derived from Raman lidars, 90
  in Kano and Hamilton inversion technique, 199 selection of backscatter-to-extinction ratio, 13, 15, 17, 30 atmosphere profiling, using Kano–Hamilton inversion technique
  basics, 188–195
  essentials and specifics of methodology, 195–199
atmosphere profiling with scanning lidar comparison of uncertainty in backscatter coefficient and optical depth profiles, 221–223
  essentials and issues of, 230–235 extraction of vertical extinction coefficient by equalizing alternative transmittance profiles, 224–225
atmospheric heterogeneity height indicator (AHHI), 252–253
atmospheric layer with increased backscattering, 174–187
  boundary determination using isoclinic lines, 183–187
  criteria for determining the boundaries, 175 determination, 253–259
  general principles of monitoring, 177–180 images of scanning lidar data and their quantification, 249–253 maximum height, determination of, 180–183 procedure of finding the boundaries of, 176–177

© 2015 John Wiley & Sons, Inc. Published 2015 by John Wiley & Sons, Inc.
auxiliary function for determining atmospheric layer boundary, 176 backscatter lidar signal, 4–6 backscatter signal distortions and corresponding inversion errors, 41–48 low-frequency distortion component, 41 zones of minimum systematic errors, 45–46 backscatter-to-extinction ratio, 12 extinction-coefficient profiles retrieved with different, 30 boundary-point solution, 15 Cabannes scattering spectrum, 84, 104 calibration of incomplete overlap function, 74 classic lidar-equation solutions, 3–4 column-integrated lidar ratio, 138, 140, 143, 149 using equal length intervals, 148–154 using range-dependent overlapping intervals, 154–158 computational solution models, 22 condition number (CN), 32 constant offset in recorded lidar signal, determining, 48–55 algorithm and solution uncertainty, 49–51 numerical simulations and experimental data, 51–55 uncertainty in retrieved extinction-coefficient profiles, 54–55 derived particulate extinction coefficient, distortions in, 141–145 differential absorption lidar (DIAL), inversion algorithm for signals of, 85–87 backscatter corrections, 87 estimation of correction term, 87 main assumptions and implicit premises, 88 uncertainty sources, 86–87 direct multiangle solution advantages of, 247
direct solution for high spectral resolution lidar, 247–249 essentials in data processing, 236–241 numerical simulation for a virtual lidar, 237–239 selection of maximum range for inverted signals of scanning lidar, 241–247 direct numerical differentiation, 107–109 distortion functions in the lidar signal, 70–71 distortions in derived particulate extinction coefficient, 141–145 distortions in extinction-coefficient profile derived from HSRL signal, 100–106 error sources, 100–101
distortions in elastic lidar signal, 4–10 actual total signal components, 4, 9 estimated offset, 6
range-dependent multiplicative component, 4, 6–7 distortions inherent to optical-depth solution, 89–99 in derived extinction coefficient due to uncertainty of Angstrom exponent, 90–95 in derived extinction-coefficient profile due to distortions in lidar signal, 97–99 in derived optical depth profile, errors in, 95–97 fractional errors of derived extinction coefficient, 90–91 effective overlap
definition and derivation algorithm, 213–216
divergence of, 216–220
elastic-lidar signal
backscatter-to-extinction ratio, 12
basic inversion principle for single-wavelength elastic lidar, 13–14 classic (ideal) lidar equation, 4 Fernald boundary-point solution, 15–16 implicit premises and mandatory assumptions required for inversion, 18–21 particulate and molecular backscatter-to-extinction ratios, 12 power-law relationship between particulate backscattering and extinction, 15 electromagnetic low-frequency noise component, 116–117 error factor in lidar data inversion, 31–40 in homogeneous atmosphere, 35
in retrieved extinction coefficient, 34 ersors
in derived optical depth profile, 95–97 in derived extinction coefficient, 97–100 experimental uncertainty, 24–29 extinction coefficient, 14. see also retrieved extinction-coefficient profiles within intervals selected a priori, 148–158 piecewise continuous profiles, 148–158 profiling using optical-depth profiles and backscatter-coefficient profile, 137–148 retrieved through numerical differentiation of optical depth, 118–119 retrieved using uncertainly boundaries of inverted optical depth, 158–174 extraordinary smoothing, 18
extrapolation of optical depth, 129–131
INDEX

Fernald boundary-point solution, 15–16
fractional errors of derived extinction coefficient, 90–91, 93–94 function \( q(r) \), 2

high spectral resolution lidar (HSRL), 82–83, 248–249 HSRL signals, 83–84
direct solution in multangle mode, 247–249 inversion algorithm for signals of, 82–85 normalized function of iodine vapor transmission, 84 particulate backscattering in molecular channel of, 100 temperature- and pressure-dependent attenuation factor, 84 ideal lidar signal transformation, 4 ill-conditioned solution, 32, 34 in situ instrumentation, 18 interpolation or extrapolation uncertainty, 24 inversion algorithm for signals of high spectral resolution lidar (HSRL), 82–85 for signals of Raman lidar, 80–82 inversion procedure for elastic-lidar signal implicit premises and mandatory assumptions, 18–21

extraordinary smoothing, 18
overfitting, 18
inverted data, numerical differentiation basics, 107–111
as a filtering procedure, 113–119
nonlinear fit in numerical differentiation, 111–113

Kano–Hamilton inversion technique, 188–190 basic assumptions or implicit premises, 209
basics, 188–195
combined azimuthal–vertical searching, 196 distortion components, 199–200
essentials and specifics of methodology, 195–199 issues in practical application, 199–213 multiplicative and additive distortions of backscatter signal, 199–206 near-end distortions of optical depth, 201 optical profiles, 199–206 retrieved optical parameters, 190–195 selection of minimum and maximum heights, 197–198

Klett–Fernald’s solution, 15
Kootenai Creek Fire, 257–259
Lagrange remainder, 108–109 least squares method, 36, 38, 111 lidar backscatter signal, determination of, 3 multiplicative and additive distortions, 4–10 lidar equation for homogeneous atmosphere, 33 lidar operative range for optical depth solution, 16 lidar overlap function, issues in examining additive and multiplicative distortions, 65–66 alignment issues, 70

in an inhomogeneous atmosphere, 69–70 calibration issues, 74–76 distortion in linear fit, 72 effective, determination and specifics of, 213–220 issues of signal inversion within incomplete overlap area, 73–77 level of distortion in, 72–73 lidar profiling as simulation, 21–22, 31 random systematic error in, 24–25, 27–29 lidar-signal recording time in non-stationary atmosphere, 26 linear approximation for transmission profile, 147–148 low-frequency noise components numerical differentiation and uncertainty in inverted data, 115–116 uncertainty in retrieved extinction-coefficient, 116 measurement uncertainty, sources of, 9 modeling and simulation, 23 model inadequacy, 24 models of multiplicative and additive distortions in lidar signals, 4–5 Montana’s I-90 Fire, 125, 151 multiplicative distortion of lidar signal, 4–10 sources of, 7

multi-scattering component of lidar signal, 7–8 problems with estimation, 8 noise-corrupted optical depth, 118–119, 121–123 nonidealized photodetector signal, transformation of, 9
nonlinear fit in numerical differentiation, 111–113 nonstationary atmosphere, experimental uncertainty in, 25–29 numerical differentiation, direct extraction of the extinction coefficient with, 108–110 numerical differentiation and uncertainty in inverted data accuracy of, 108, 109
basics, 107–109
as a filtering procedure, 113–119
general assumptions used in, 113 linear approximation, 110 numerical differentiation and uncertainty in inverted data (Continued) nonlinear fit in, 111–113 use of weight functions, 111 using Taylor’s series, 108 numerical simulation, 23 offset in backscatter signal, estimation of, 55–65.
see also recorded lidar signal, constant offset in in integrated signals, 56–57 method for discriminating and reducing systematic signal distortions, 59–63 optical-depth profiles, 107 distortions in, 89–99
errors in derived optical depth profile, 95–97 in the near zone of lidar searching, 129–137 polynomial function and level of approximation, 112–113 profiling of extinction coefficient using, 137–148 range-resolution interval, 110 removal of erroneous bulges and concavities in, 121–125 shaped profile of, 121–122 optical parameters of atmosphere
aposteriori simulation, 22
apriori assumption, 21 random systematic errors of derived atmospheric profiles, 24–31 optimal maximum height, estimating, 125–128
overfitting, 18
overlap function, 2
parameter uncertainty, 24 parameter uncertainty in boundary-point solution, 29–31
particulate and molecular backscatter-to-extinction ratios, 12 particulate backscatter-coefficient profile estimation, 142 particulate extinction coefficient solution for, 14 photomultiplier photocathode spatial non-uniformity and lidar signal distortion, 7 Raman lidar
atmospheric profiling using, 80–81 errors in derived extinction-coefficient profiles, 89–99 inversion algorithm for signals of, 80–82 random noise in lidar signal, 5 random systematic error, 25 random systematic error in lidar profiling of atmosphere, 24–25 random systematic errors of derived extinction-coefficient profiles, 24–31 assumption of a “frozen” atmosphere, 26–27 range-height indicator (RHI), 250–251 range-independent lidar ratio, 137–139 real signal recorded by the lidar instrument, 2, 4 real square-range-corrected backscatter signal, 9 recorded lidar signal, 3 constant offset in. see constant offset in recorded lidar signal, determining simplified model of, 4–5 relative error and error factor of backscatter coefficient, 35 relative error and error factor of extinction coefficient, 34, 104 retrieved extinction-coefficient profiles, 28–29, 44 absolute and relative errors, 34–35 calculated with different backscatter-to-extinction ratios, 30 high-frequency variations in, 114–115 low-frequency noise in, 116 reversed backscatter-to-extinction ratios, 13 separation of backscatter and transmission components general principle for, 78 high spectral resolution lidar (HSRL), inversion algorithm for signals of, 82–85 principal drawbacks, 79 Raman lidar, inversion algorithm for signals of, 80–82
splitting-lidar inversion techniques, 79 using scanning elastic lidar, 79 shaped profile of optical depth, 121–123 extinction coefficient, 124 principle for selecting $h_{\text{max}}$ for, 125–128 shaping procedures, 120–123 signal-induced noise, 7 signal inversion, assumptions and implicit premises in, 10–11 signal smoothing, 5
real backscatter signal after, 6 signal-to-background ratio (SBR), 46 signal-to-noise ratio (SNR), 46–47, 68, 73, 100, 113 signal-to-offset ratio (SOR), 46–47, 96 simulated lidar signals, 43, 47 single backscatter signal, classical form, 1 single-wavelength elastic lidar, basic inversion algorithm for, 12–14 smoothed optical depth, 122–123 smoothed square-range-corrected signal, 58 smoothing technique, 120
splitting-lidar inversion techniques, 79
splitting lidars, 79
splitting mode, 79
square-range-corrected lidar signal after removal of offset, 53–54 corrupted by high-frequency random noise and constant, offset, 56
  integral of, 56–57, 60–64 overlap function, determination of, 70–71 simulated noise-corrupted signal, 54 slope of linear fit, 37–38 substantial quasi-random random noise in, 61–63
  transformation into special function before inversion, 13
square-range-corrected signal, 3 derivatives of, 80, 84–85 schematic of ideal transformation of light energy to, 4
standard deviation (STD) of signal, 46, 48
systematic distortions
  in derived optical profiles, 96, 201–205
  in retrieved extinction-coefficient profile, 27–31 Taylor’s theorem, 108
temporal smoothing of recorded signals, 3 transformation function for elastic lidar signal, 13 transformed elastic lidar signal, 14 two-way transmittance function, 2, 227, 233–234 in direct multangle solution, 236, 243–244 uncertainly boundaries of inverted optical depth, 158–174
  computational model, 159–163
  essentials of the data processing technique, 163–169
  experimental data obtained from clear atmospheres, 169–174
  need for determining, 159 undistorted square-range-corrected backscatter signal, integral of, 57
upper boundary of increased backscattering area, determination of, 253–259
virtual zenith-directed lidar backscatter signal measured in incomplete overlap range, 67–69
  distorted profiles of lidar signals averaged in time, 27
  “weighted” extinction coefficient components, 14, 39
  “weighted” optical depth components, 40 well-conditioned solution, 32, 34 zenith-directed lidar, 17, 177 height interval requirement for determining constant, B, 50
numerical simulations, 44–45 boundary-point solution of, 15–16